rem members of the opposition party, hnt lonbtedly the policy, said to be recomended, accords with the theory of the amers of the Government. Those old tatesmen, as may be ecen from their debates pon the subject, declined glving the election f President directly to the people hecense they thought that it would create too much ounlur excitement and agitation and passion. For that reeson they decided that the people honld only elect Presidential electors, and that the electors should elect the President. he theory being that the electors should be perfectly free to elect any man they pleased. It was thought that this interposing of elec-oral colleges hetween the people and the elecion of President would prevent any great popular excitement. But the wisest men can't snow how political machinery will work nntil they see it in actual operation. In all onr Presidential elections, the people, although roting formally for electors, have felt just as if they were voting directly for President. The cundidatee for electors have not been thought of at all except as mere lustruments or iastrumentalities ln the election of particular candidates for the Presidency. Indeed a very considerable portion of the voters have really not known, until they presented themselves at the polls, that they could vote only for electoral candidates and not directly for the Presidential candidato. Certainly we have no objection to seeing the theory of the authors of the government carried out in practice if it can be, hat we much donbt whether it can. We hardly belleve, that the people, after they have been so long accustomed to give a virtually direct vote for President and exulted so much in the privilege of doing so, can be induced to vote for any electoral ticket without knowing distiretly how the persons composing that ticket, if elected, will themselves vote. The New York News thinks that it is a plau of the Administration that "Grant and Entler be killed off." We have spoken of extradition treaties, but while if we had an extradition treaty with Spain, it would not change or modify in the slightest degree the character of the proceedngs in the case of Arguelles, we have no such treaty with her. We have extradition treaties with Great Britain, France, and the German States, but none with Spain. In 1848 Congress passed a law in regard to the method of procedure on the part of those who sought to get possession of the persons of those who had taken refuge among ns, in cases where there are treaties, but declared that "this act shall continue in force during the existence of any treaty of extradition with any foreign govsinment, and no longer." When that law was enasted, can the Congress that enacted it have dreamed, cen anybody have droamed, that the time would ever come, that the time was only sixteen years off, when a President of the United States, without the least regard to the provisions of the law, would order a victim throttled in the dark and given up to a most oppressive government, with which we never had an extradition treaty?

As the services of the three-year regiments are beginning to expire, and it mey be the field, it is of the utmost importance that proper attention should be paid to creating a regular and vigorous system of recruiting, which Jomini says is the prime necessity to a ncceesful prosecution of war. The Boston Advertiser suggests an expedient policy for replenishing the depleted renks of the army without requiring conscription. It proposes that the Government should estl nate the sucplies of men which It must receive for the enrient military year, as it does the supplies of money; and let its calls upon the States be made, not for masses of three hundred thousand or half a million recruits, but for a certain monthly quota, to be drawn by conscription if not otherwise supplied. Every ommunity will then know precisely what is of the few men nuder his charge, what should before it, will be able to provide for the future when lahor is plenty, and to indge of the best means for answering the requirements of its own case; and the country will cease to be racked by the auxlety and alarm cansed by sndden demands for a vast nnm-ber of men to meet some pressing emergency.
